Three Texas online legal resources have certain official characteristics, based on statute, but are not commonly regarded as official. The resources themselves give no descriptive information about their status or official characteristics.

The state's administrative code and administrative register are prima facie evidence of the text of the administrative rules they contain. See TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. §§ 2002.054 & 2002.022(a) (evidentiary value of code and register, respectively). Subsequent law directed the Secretary of State to make the administrative code and administrative register available online. See TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. §§ 2002.057(a)(1) & 2002.0151(a)(1). The Secretary of State approves the print Texas Administrative Code published by Thomson West, which is considered authoritative but not strictly official, since rules as officially filed are controlling. The Secretary of State is also responsible for the editorial content of the Texas Register, which is currently printed and distributed by LexisNexis. As for session laws, the Secretary of State obtains the "bills that have become law" (TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 405.014). PDF copies of original documents constituting the enrolled bills of the current legislature, including signatures, are available on the Secretary of State's website. The other online resources investigated here are not official. The sources indicate they are provided to facilitate access; their print counterparts are designated as official.

Texas is not addressing the authentication of online legal resources.

There is no indication that the state is planning to specially authenticate web sources using new technologies.

Has the state eliminated the print publication of any of these titles in favor of online only since the 2007 report? Texas has not eliminated any print publication of primary law to date.

Has the state enacted legislation guaranteeing the public's permanent access to state online government information since the 2007 report? Texas does guarantee permanent public access to government publications.

Have courts in your state adopted a medium neutral citation system since the 2007 report? The Texas Supreme Court has not adopted medium neutral citation format.

Have there been any other significant changes to the 2007 state summary? There have been no significant changes since the 2007 survey.

Texas agency rules are initially published in the Texas Register and, upon adoption, compiled and published in the Texas Administrative Code. Though not considered official, the print version of the Texas Administrative Code, published by Thomson West, is authorized by the Secretary of State's office. The official version of agency rules are those filed electronically with the Secretary of State. Section 2001.037 of the Texas Government Code states that if there is a conflict the version on file with the Secretary of State is considered the official version. Sections 2002.054 and 2002.022(a) of the Texas Government Code provide for electronic access to the Texas Administrative Code and the Texas Register, respectively. The most recent version of the Texas Register is available on the Secretary of State's website. Through an agreement with the Secretary of State, the University of North Texas Libraries maintains an archive of the online Texas Register (June 14, 1991–issue immediately before latest). The purpose of this archive is to provide permanent storage and public access to non-current issues.

The Texas Legislature meets every other year, in odd numbered years, for 140 days beginning the second Tuesday in January. Bills introduced during a session can be viewed on the Legislative Council's website (at <http://www.legis.state.tx.us>). This unofficial website includes bill history, committee amendments and, if enrolled or passed, the final bill. Researchers may view PDF copies of the original documents constituting the enrolled bills of the current legislature, including signatures, on the Secretary of State's website (at <http://www.sos.state.tx.us>). TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 405.014 charges the Secretary of State to "bind all enrolled bills and resolutions in volumes on which the date of the session is placed". These bound volumes are the General and Special Laws of the State of Texas. They are printed under the authority of the Secretary of State by contract with a private publisher.

It is common for researchers to cite to Vernon's Texas Statutes and Codes Annotated when referencing Texas laws. This print version is published by Thomson West and is not an official version of the laws. Should you wonder why the Texas statutes are referred to as Vernon's, a bit of history. In 1925, one of the years the Texas statutes went through a major revision, Vernon's Publishing Company was the quasi-official publisher of the statutes. Years later, Vernon's Publishing was absorbed by West Publishing Company but "Vernon's" was retained as part of the title of the published set.

Texas has been codifying its civil statutes over the past several years. Twenty-six subject matters have been identified and the project is close to completion. Some civil statutes, however, still remain and are cited to by article number. To view the current but unofficial version of Texas statutes with incorporated amendments, researchers may visit the Legislative Council's website (at <http://www.legis.state.tx.us>). As noted above, the Secretary of State maintains the "bills that have become law" (TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 405.014), which are an official version of Texas laws. The Secretary of State's website has the legislation from the current session. Legislation from the 78th session forward is archived by the University of North Texas (at <http://texinfo.library.unt.edu/sessionlaws/default.htm>).

Texas court information can be accessed electronically from a single website maintained by the Office of Court Administration (at <http://www.courts.state.tx.us>). 38 Texas counties have implemented electronic filing. Information on electronic filing is linked to the Office of Court Administration's website (at <http://www.courts.state.tx.us/jcit/efiling/efilinghome.asp>). Opinions available electronically are not considered official. Likewise, Texas does not have a print official version of its court opinions. Funds for the official publication of reports were not appropriated in 1963 and the state has been without an official reporter since. West Publishing Company, now Thomson West, created Texas Cases, an unofficial reporter that republishes just the Texas opinions found in the multi-state regional South Western Reporter. Only the Texas Supreme Court, Court of Criminal Appeals and appellate courts are reporting courts.
