Unlike “standup comedy” in which one performer tells pre-planned jokes, improvisational comedy involves a group of performers making up scenes and playing games, based on audience suggestions. A ComedySportz match features two teams of “actletes” competing for laughs and points, with a referee keeping things moving and calling fouls. Each team will improvise a scene inspired by suggestions drawn from audience responses. Every show is different, with different players, different games and different audiences supplying new suggestions. Everyone has a good time and no-one gets offended. If an “actlete” steps beyond the bounds of good taste, the “brown bag foul” will be called to set things straight. ComedySportz Indianapolis has been creating improvisational comedy spectacle since 1992 and has provided presentations for The American Heart Association, ADT, Van Rooy Properties, The Finish Line, the George Fern Company, and the Indiana Sports Corporation, as well as numerous universities and local law firms.
